SUBJECT: SNIE 2-2-61: SOVIET AND OVER RUACTIONS TO TOUSIBLE US COURSES OF ACTION WITH RESPECT TO EXELIN

THE PROBLEM

To estimate the probable reactions of the USSR, Communist China, the NATC members, and certain other countries to a set of consures reflecting US determination to preserve the Western position in Berlin. These measures include military, political, economic, and clandestine preparations designed both to convey US intentions to undertake steps up to and including, if necessary, general war, and to put the US in a position to carry out these steps.

THE ESTIMATE

J. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS UNDERLYING SOVIET REACTIONS

l. Attitule to Wor. The Soviet landers are empfident of the prospects for advancing their cause by means short of allout war. We continue to believe that, so long as they remain vulterable to US strategic power, they will not willingly enterinto situations in which, by their enjoylations, the risks of general war are substantial. $\frac{1}{2}$ Similarly, they will not wish to set in trulu a course of events leading to leanh war in an area like Central Europe, where the dangers of escalation to general. nuclear War are high. However, they believe that as their own strength has grown, the US has become increasingly deterred by the same considerations and that the risks of aggressive actions on their part have been correspondingly reduced. Thus the charges bevo increased that the Soviets may so miscalculate Western responses as to precipitate a situation from which meither side would feel able to withdraw.

If The Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence, Department of the Army, believes that this sentence should be extended to point out that the USAR would probably draw back to almost any such situation which night arise, as previously estimated in paragraph 1/16 of MIR 11-4-60, "Main Trends in Soviet Commbitties and Policies, 1960-1965," dated 1 December 1960. He therefore believes that the following should be added to this sentence: "and will endeaver to draw back from such situations should they evolve."

- 2. Provide. While important substantive considerations mativate the Communications entered of West Barlin, Soviet prestice, and that of Khrushehev bimself, is already heavily involved. The Soviet leaders are especially sensitive on this score, feeling that their country, long regarded as backward, has not been accorded the world position to which its power and achievements entitle it. They are therefore the more anxious that their recently acquired atrength should not be derogated. Closely linked to this, they have in recent years made a central proposition of their claim that the "World relation of forces" is inexamply shifting in their favor. They will be greatly concerned that any subsects of the Berlin situation which appeared to confound this proposition would deflate their recent successes and darken their future prospects for political advance.
- 3. Freedom of Action. We believe that this desire to protest and increase their prestige, at home as well as abroad, is at this stage a region factor impinging on Saviet freedom of action in the Perlin question. We recognize that the Chicage Communists exact a constant pressure on the USAR for a generally harder line against the West, and the Shot German region does the same on the specific issue of Marlin. We believe, bowever, that Seviet positions on as potentially explosive a question as this are firmly grounded in considerations of celf-interest and relatively frame to such pressures. There are no industriess of differences over Berlin within the Soviet leadership.

4. Assessment of Local Factors. The Soviets consider that the geography of the Berlin problem confers great adventages upon them. They are therefore prope to believe that, sooner or later, the West will have to admowledge its local military inferiority and begin to acquiesce in Soviet demands. In the reantime, the Soviets mead not fear in Berlin, as they often oust in non-Bloc areas, that their opportunities are fleeting and must be seized or lost; they are conscious that, as the situation stands today, the choice of timing and method remain, except perhaps in a full crisis, largely within their control.

11. SCME SPECIFIC SOVIET REACTIONS

5. Specific Soviet reactions to individual US moves would, of course, depend heavily upon a number of immediate related factors. In general, however, the foregoing considerations provide some indication of the manner in which the USSR might interpret and respond to various US measures. We discuss in the final, section their general reaction to the totality of Western measures.

TOP SUMMER LIMITED DISTRIBUTION

M.Litery Measures. The USSR would be atmious, in the military field above all, to prove that it could not be intimidated. The militant note struck at the recent apprivariancy of Milther's itemsion and the display of strength under on Aviation Day were almost certainly designed to serve this purpose. 10 the same end, Khrushchov has ambured a large increase in defease expenditures and supported the scheduled reduction of Sowlet forces. In response to US moves to strengthen its forces in Surope, the USSR would almost certainly undertake equivalent moves and take recurrent tangible demonstrations of its strongth. The USSS might increase its forces in Polynd and Germany or undertake some mobilization of reserves, particularly if the US went on to further dilitary preparations. Additionally, the Soviets might hint or declars that they were stationing nuclear weapons with Soviet forces in East Germany or give indications of their strength in medium and intercontinental range sassiles. US measures to increase its readiness for general nuclear war would almost certainly provoke Soviet acquires to improve rendinces.

TOP S SET LIMPING BLOASIPUTION

Clearly the timing and pace of measures specifically relating to US readiness for nuclear war would greatly affect the whole Soviet attitude.

- 7. Especial Measures. The Soviets probably would not react very seriously to purely contingent decisions to undertake NATO embargoes and to deny the use of NATO transport facilities.
 They would retain doubts that such decisions would be fully implemented or persisted in. However, they would observe NATO planning in this aphere as an important test of the unity which the Alliance could muster over the Berlin question, Harmonious Western agreement on far-reaching economic sanctions would probably increase the resolve which the USSR attributed to the NATO numbers on this issue. This factor might in turn corry over to its estimate of NATO's willingness to use military force. However, we must recognize that there is an inherent danger that the USSR ' would consider that economic or other measures within the overall program, and not the determination to use military force if necessary, represent the extent of our real intentions.
- 8. Measures Aimed at the Satellites. The Soviets probably believe that the West has at present only a limited capability onstrate such a capebility susceeded, the Soviets would recognize and parhaba even overrate the vulnerability of the GER regime, aspecially as tensions increased. They would probably be such loss concerned on this score in the other Satellites. Measures of this sort would produce contradictory pressures on the Soviet Leaders. An overt effort by the West to attaulate dissidence in East Germany and elsewhere in Eastern Europe through public statements and appeals to the population would probably produce a stiffening of Soviet resolve. If, however, private Western warnings and classestime activities convinced Mescow that a Berlin crisis could provoke a covertly supported wave of dispression in the Satellites, then the Soviets might be inclined to proceed more cautiously in their coves against Berlin.

TOP SHIRET LIMITED DISCRIPTION

^{2/} The Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence, Department of the Arty, offers the consent that the Soviets would be susceptible to pressures in this field only if the West produced evidence of a capability to support and protect anti-Soviet-regime novements. Without such evidence, be believes that the proposed activities would tend to firm the Soviets' determination to eliminate Western control and influence in West Berlin.

LIMITED & COTRIDUTION

- 9. Political Measures. As the posited US course of action unfolded, the Soviets would be alart to signs that it signified a fundamental shift in US policy which could affect the East-West competition on a broader front than Central Europe. In this consection, they would probably interpret steps to undertake a sustained expansion of the US defence effort as portenling a generally harder and once aggressive American line over the entire range of confrontation. They would regard this as undesirable because they would believe that this turn in US policy would make it difficult to elicit a US response to possible future "soft tactice." This consideration, we believe, would weigh as heavily with them as would the prospect that they might have to adjust their economic plans over a long period in order to keep pose with the US effort with increased willtary expeditures of their own.
- 10. Measures Aimed at World Opinion. The USSR would certainly take the US courses of action postulated in our problem into full account in its already substantial propagands campaign on the Berlin question. It would calculate that Western preparations of this sort would provide a hitherto unparalleled apportunity to heighten apprehensions in Surape and divide the numbers of EAIO.

LIMITED SINTERNITION

Soviet efforts to influence European opinion would therefore place beavy stress on Seviet dilitary might and the consequences of nuclear wor, while at the same time caphanizing that, For the USSR's part, the path of negotiation remained open. For non-European ambiences, the USSR would probably concentrate upon the alleged pagesful nature of its proposals and attempt to contrast them with the warlike posture of its apponents. It would seek to portray the West as lacking constructive political suggestions and unwilling to negotiate on a problem which endangered would peace.

III. REACTIONS IN OTHER COUNTRIES

The Mashers of MATO

11. A US program of preparatory measures intended to demonstrate Western resolution over Berlin, and involving a constituent to general war if necessary, would confront NATO with a crucial test of the viability of the alliance. The in-mediate consequence in the NAC would probably be a strengthening of NATO's cohesion in the face of an impending crisis, complet with a sense of relief that the US was asserting leadership.

However, as undercurrent of missiving would exist from the start, and if Western accounts failed to produce a visibly sobering affect on the USSR, this feeling would grow. At this point, demonds for an exhaustive attempt at magnificant would rapidly pick up strength. The chapters are good that the members would comparete in joint planning for contingency actions, but if tensions continued to increase, indications would probably crise that some of the members would be unwilling, in the final analysis, to recort to military action. In a tipe of crisis, much would depend on the actions of West Germany, France, and the UK.

12. West Sermany. The West German Government would be quick to support in principle and ecoperate in a NATO-wide comprehensive program of the sort postulated here. The German cutherities would Feel committed to follow the US load on uilitary preparations for a possible Berlin crisis, fearing that their failure to accept the same risks as the US would discredit the Federal Republic within the NATO allience and have far-reaching adverse consequences for German interests in Berlin. The Sermans are keenly owere of the existence of reservations concerning Berlin policy in the UK and other NATO countries, and they would react to various proposals with an eye to strengthening the bard of those in MATO who are making a more military policy on Berlin.

13. At the same time, Brus would increase its insistence that it be granted full participation in all future Allied contingency planning for Berlin. With regard to specific military accourse, German defence officials would be likely to object strumously to any changes in the control arrangements for nuclear Vergous which in their view indicated that these might not be available to the NATO shield forces. We believe, however, that they would not press these objections to the point of intronsigence during a period of crisis over Berlin.

Large, follow the lead of the national government. The political opposition and a sizable negment of the press would probably except continguacy planning and actual measures of propagations but would urge, with increasing vigor as the crisis despend, that eacther round of negotiations be tried and that political and someonic measures be employed before military moves were undertaken.

De Gaulle's long historical parapeative and his personal experiences in interactional diplomacy have convinced him that resoluteness is the best warpon in leading with an opposent. He is already explosizing the prinary importance of France's European obligations; he has announced the withdrawal of one division (row Algeria and has indicated that additional forces, including some air units, will be on the way shortly. - 16. While de Goulle could be expected to look his support to a set of comprehensive preparatory measures, he might in addition wish to use the Berlin crisis as one more proof of the read for a triportite global directorate, nuclear sharing, and reorganization of NATO. However, even if he received no satisfaction on these natters, we believe his position vis-a-vis the Sovieta and the Berlin problem would not change significantly.

- 17. The UK. While the UK has recently shown itself nontent to follow US initiative in contingency planning for the Berlin problem, we believe that current British firmness in the face of Soviet bluster is designed unitary to prepare the way for a new attempt at regotiation. The unjor considerations guiding British policy will be: (a) the credibility of the US determent;
 (b) the UK's vulnerability; (c) the adequay of NATO's conventional capabilities; and (d) the sensitivity of the British public to
- 18. Public apprehension over the possibility that the UK might become engaged in a nuclear war would rise charply as US preparatory actions gave usualstakable evidence of the seriouscess of US determination. Further, British officials would alsost certainly judge that there was insufficient time to strongthen their conventional forces on the Continent to the point where those forces could provide a high threshold before the introduction of thetical nuclear weapons. The British field expanders already regard NATC capabilities to tight without custour weapons as extremely low. Accordingly, the UK would seek to issue against a situation arising in which it lost to the US all imitiative in the determination of strategy. With this end in view, it would almost certainly demand an opening of negotiations with the Seviets before agreeing to participate fully in the proposed reasures, and would actively solicit the support of other NATO members in this endeavor. At the same thus the UK will continue to give support to the US contingency planning. However, formal UK support for an allied policy of firmment in Perlin would probably be underent by evalences of a British desire to agentiate so strong as to diminish the archibility of the UK's resoluteness in Seviet eyes.

19. Other MATO Members. The other European MATO countries, including Italy, would generally tend to take their cues from the WS, UK, France, and West Germany if the latter were colling in Omison. By and large, they regard the Alliance as their best guarantee of notional survival and would eccept the implementation of a specific program of preparatory measures, designed to stiffer the resolve of the Alliance as a whole. However, there would be derivates for full consultation within NATO. Moreover, seem member governments, notably the Seamingvians, are faced with Strong public attitudes on nuclear worfare and would probably advice against steps which they felt might lead to nuclear Wal believe, however, that the Ware in end.

they would eccept NATO decisions, although they would try to minimize their own direct participation in the proposed beasures.

- 20. Man-NATO Countries. Few of the non-NATO countries are concerned with the rights and prongs of the Berlin question.

 Those closely linked to the major entagonists see it principly as a test of strength in which each hopes that his benefactor will provail. The rejerity of the countries of Asia and Africa, however, have rejerded the issue as a power struggle irrelevant to their own esseems except ingofar as it threatens to ignite a general war, as a result of which they would inevitably suffer.
- Solviet exploitation of the dangers it raised, would make this obtains appear likely to the unconstituted countries. The automateurity pressure in the SR, led by such countries as India, to force the autogenists to rejutiation. Although US efforts to convince world opinion of the aggressive nature of Soviet desends on Berlin would have a good effect in some quertors, other sectors of opinion would conclude that US military preparations constituted the wore immiliate threat to the pance. Much would repend on whatever initiatives the US took to resolve the origins by negotiation.

- 22. At an advanced stage of crisis, local average to US overseas bases which might become targets in time of war would probably intensify. This would be most libely in Libya and Morecco, where the governments might seek to domy the US use of its bases, and in Japan, where intense leftist pressure would aim at achieving the same result.
- 23. East Germany. The East German regime will remain generally responsive to Soviet instructions, particularly in time of crisis. However, Ulbright will also urge Khrushchov to maintain and increase the pressure of the West to meet the Bloc's demands and to avoid further postponements. Should it appear that the West Berlin escape route might be closed off, the refugee flow from East Germany would probably swall significantly, and the regime would probably respond with stricter controls. As the crisis heightened there might well be spentaneous remifestations of unrest in the East German population, although we believe there would be no general nothreak. We believe that the extent of the response to outright appeals for antiregine activities would depend on a great may unpredictable circumstances including the apparent imminence of military action and cannot be forecast accurately.

TOR HIMITIAN LIMITED PLINKIBUTION

- 24. Commist Chica. We believe that a US course of action stressing military preparations in Europe would encourage the Chinese to search for local appartunities through which to advance their influence and power in the Far Fact at US expense. The Soviets might are advantage in raising a threat to South Korea, in limited Chinese probing actions in the Thiwan Strait or in intensifications of present North Vietnamese and Pathet Lad pressures on the South Vietnamese and Royal Lap governments, believing such actions to be essentially low risk policies but of sufficient seriousness to the US to provide a useful diversion.

 However, the USSR would probably regard the Berlin question as sufficiently damperous, and sufficiently ausceptible to miscal-culation, to make it imprudent to encourage or tolerate the raising of tensions with a significance appearant overt challenge in another area.
- 25. In North Vietnam and Lace, Seviet influence is probably strong enough to allow Mosecw's views to provail over any possible Chinese desire to extreme Blue action there, at least in a question of whether to undertake overt, rejor military aggressions. Although the possibility of Chinese Communist extreme military action against Taiwan, Southeast Asia, or South Korea cannot be ruled out, we consider such action unlikely. China would still have to contend with a great US strategic superiority in the Western Pacific. Moreaver, Perping could not, we believe, feel assured of full Soviet support in a venture undertaken against Moscow's salvice at a time of heavy Soviet engagement in Europe. Finally, the Chinese would have to consider their subsequent relations with the Soviets as likely to be ruptured or severally strained.

26. Thus we believe that extreme Communist Military action in the Far East would probably not be undertaken by China, unitaterally or as Mosecw's agent, as a consequence of the posited US course of action. However, should the Chinese Nationalists, in an atmosphere of general crisis, make military moves against Communist China, Polping would react vigorously and would have Soviet backing.

IV. FROBABIE SOVIET COURSES OF ACTION

Soviet Estimate of Western Intentions

27. A central factor in determining Soviet reactions will be their approximation of ultimate Western military intentions. This approximate will rest in large measure on the Western military properations which they observe. But political, economic, and chandestine measures will also play an important part on Soviet calculations of their approxemat's general resolve on the Berlin question, and specifically on Western willingness to use stilltary force.

- 18 -

28. These Soviet calculations would be exceedingly complicated. The postulated course of action, and particularly the fullitary proporations covisaged, would almost containly raise substantially the Soviet leaders' estimate of Western willingness, in the most general sense, to defend the Western position in Berlin at successively higher levels of military conflict. But this new approximation would not provide them with ready indications as to precisely what lengths they could safely proceed with energial-cents against Berlin.

The Involvement of Prestige

29. The Soviets would be acutely conscious that the US course of action was raising the stakes in the Zost-West coupertition. In developing their concept of a shift in the "world relation of forces," they have identified Berlin as a signal example of the kind of position which the West, in this historically new situation, can be longer uniation. They would regard the postulated course of action as a direct challenge to this central proposition, to which they have committed their prestige and their policy.

TOP 1 .../WZ LIMITED DISCULBUTION

30. Even Western proparations designed to be low-keyed and unostentatious would be interpreted by the Soviets as a challenge to their prestige. In the first place, Seviet propogorda would probably play up and even exaggerate these preparations in an effort to turn sentiment against the US. In the second place, the Soviets wish their contention concerning the new relation of forces not only to be appropriated by the moses, but to be borne in upon Western leaders themselves. They would be greatly unsettled by the prospect that every governments, let along the world at large, would conclude that the WSK, tested on grounds of its own choosing, had been caught out in a bluff. We believe it important to point out that the number and timing of US preparatory measures would have an important bearing on the degree to which Soviet prestige was committed. In porticular, wilitary preparatory apasures undertaken with fonfare at an early stage of the developing crisis over Berlin would have the affect of raking the Soviet regotiating position more rigid.

31. In this challenge to Soviet prestige we recognize an element which could cause the USSR to deviate from its hitherto corefel calculations of risk and advantage. At the least, they would fuel compelled to respond with a strong public posture and military measures of their own to order to prove that they could not be intimidated. At the most, they might feel impelled to proceed further with their amounced unilateral intentions.

TOP .. THE LIMITED DISTRIBUTION

Cther Factors

32. Within this range, the Soviet recetion will be influenced in important ways by various largediate factors. One of these is the conner in which the Berlin problem develops in the coming months. The Soviets are at present histing at the possibility of new negotiations in a way which indicates that they hope to just the Berlin question into diplomatic channels before a full-scale throat to their prestige develops. At a later stage, perhaps after they had already taken some coves to proesed undinterally, they might find it more difficult to agree to terms of reguligition which the West could pecept. Another factor is the degree of Wastorn discrity which they proceive; if this disunity is great enough, they adopt congider it advantageous to respond with intense pressures in order to medicize the political costs of the US courses of action, confident that when a showdown loomed, they could evert it by postponing a threatened step. Another important factor would be the extent to which

- 21 -

Western diplomatic, political, and economic measures had convinced the Soviets that recourse to unilateral action would be contrary to their interests. A final element is the consistency and perseverance displayed by the US itself; having persunded themselves in the past that the US almost cortainly would not go to general war over the Barlin issue, the Soviet leaders would be prome to hold to this estimate if they detected contradictions or uncertainty in the American stance.

The Soviet Magatiations Position

their aims in Berlin through negotiations. Their core recent pressure is intended to bring about negotiations on terms most foromable to themselves. We have previously estimated that the windrom Soviet position in such negotiations would probably be an interin agreement providing same de facto recognition of the GES and arrangements for Berlin which at least laid the ground-work for further Communist advances at a later date, or perhaps only the second of these. If you might the postulated US course of action affect the Seviet position in future negotiations?

- 22 -

^{3/} NTE 11-7-61, "Soviet Short-Ture Intentions Regarding Berlin | and Germany," dated 25 April 1961.

TOP SECRET LIMITED DISTRIBUTION

34. The way is which the two sides arrive at negativities could have a decisive influence on the answer to this question. Magnitations wight arise in an atmosphere of crisis in which the Soviets viewed their prestige as directly and visibly challenged. In this instance, for the reasons we have cited, we believe that their position would harden, their minimum demands would rise, and they would be more willing to allow the talks to break down. In taking this like, they would be concerned primarily to deal with the immediate threat to the image of their general power position, an image which they conceive to be, in political terms, as important as its actual substance. In this event, they would probably plan to revert to a course of unilateral action, colculating that they could keep each small, individual step within the bounds of reasonable risk in the light of fluctuating Western readiness and resolve to oppose them.

35. At the other hand, negotiations might begin in effective stances when the Soviet leaders, although aware of the undolding US course of setion, did not consider that this course had gone so for as to increase drastically the extent to which their prestige was already enjoyed. In this case, they might choose to work toward a solution which reduced the impediate tensions surroup!Ing the Berlin Issue and at the same time did not foreeleme the possibility of future alvances at a more propitious time. They eight settle, for example, for a relatively innecessary agreement which required neither side to absorb a dramatic defeat, or provided for continuing lower-level regulations, or both.

36. In either event, however, we believe that the postulated US course of action, if carried through skillfully and without sorious breaches in Western ranks, would cause the Seviets to adopt a further consure of caution in their approach to the Berlin problem. So long as Western readiness remained high, and Western resolve appeared to them firm, they would almost certainly raise their estimate of therisks and political Habilities associated with unilateral action. They would be equally concerned, however, to preserve the image of the USSS as a strong and confident power which was sooner or later to have its way in Berlin. It remains possible that, at a time of intense stress, those conflicting yet fundamental considerations would lead the Soviets into an action rash by even their own standards, or into a miscalculation. We think it more likely, however, that they would foresee and forestall such a critical point and noterate their policy as necessary, intending to return to the attack at a later and safer time. In unking this estimate, we are conscious that, as the postulated course of action unfolded, many unpredictable factors would come into play which take it impossible to reach a final judgment today with any very high degree of assurance. This suggests the high importance of a continuing review of all elements of the situation.
